Corporate responsibility of AirBlue

Javed Waheed,

I write in response to Mr. Junaid Hamid's article 'Corporate Responsibility of AirBlue'. It is indeed a tragic disclosure of beating around the bush and not having any sense of corporate, civil or legal responsibility on the part of the management of AirBlue.

Even after the passage of many months, nothing has come out in the open as to how the crash took place. Disclosure about any air accidents are usually made a part and parcel of global aviation networking, so as to prevent such horror-ridden accidents from taking place in future. However, we have never, like everything else shrouded in mystery made public the reasons behind such air crashes. We, as part of civil society are behind the affectees group and demand to know why the Ministry of Defence and the government of the day is not pursuing Mr. Shahid Khaqan Abbasi to firstly make public the reasons behind the crash and secondly cancel the licence of AirBlue till such time that their management does not wake up to fulfill its commitments and responsibilities to the crash victims' families.
